

The Battle of Wagram
6 July, 1809
(a Grande Armée scenario by John Crouch)

After the Grande Armée had occupied Vienna, Napoleon had fought the unsuccessful two-day battle of Aspern-Essling and been forced to retire to Lobau Island and the south bank of the Danube to reconsider his plans. The Archduke Charles did nothing to follow up his success, and Napoleon was able to spend the next six weeks converting Lobau into an impregnable base for future operations, linking it to the southern bank by three well protected and constantly patrolled bridges. During this period he also lost no time in summoning up outlying formations, including those led by Eugène and Macdonald from the Italian front, and by early July no less than 188,000 French and Allied troops and 500 guns were in the vicinity.

Napoleon proved on this occasion that he could still learn from his mistakes, and the second crossing of the Danube was meticulously planned. On the stormy night of 4/5 July a pontoon bridge was swung over the water separating Lobau Island from the north bank and troops were soon pouring over – to the great surprise of the Austrians, who had been lulled into a false sense of security by the previous weeks of apparent inactivity. At this juncture the Austrians had some 155,000 men and 450 cannon at their disposal in the Marschfeld ('parade ground') area. The Archduke had anticipated a French attack, if at all, near Aspern, but Napoleon's crossing farther east near Gross-Enzersdorf surprised him. Although two corps became entangled, Napoleon's master-plan continued to unfold and his army wheeled north and west, driving before them the ill-coordinated parts of the Austrian army which tried to intercept their line of march. By evening the French were in control of a vast salient some 15 miles long, extending from Aspern to Wagram in a great curve. Bitter fighting on the northern flank, where the Archduke Charles personally led up the reserve grenadiers to check the French advance near Gerasdorf, ended the day's battle, and both Commanders in Chief settled down to plan the morrow's events while the rank and file slept fitfully under arms, with frequent interruptions. Napoleon's main concern was how to win the victory on the 6th before the Archduke John could appear from the east, near Pressburg, with his 12,500 men.

Early the next morning it was Archduke Charles who boldly seized the initiative.

The Scenario:

The weather is Sunny, with no variation. The ground is Hard. The game's Basic Length is 10 turns.

All towns are hard cover, except Stammersdorf, Kragran, Sussenbrunn, Pyrsdorf, Grosshofen, and Wittau, which are soft cover. The entrenchments are soft cover.

The Austrians set up first, then the French.

The Austrian army is "Confident." Its Break Point is: 27

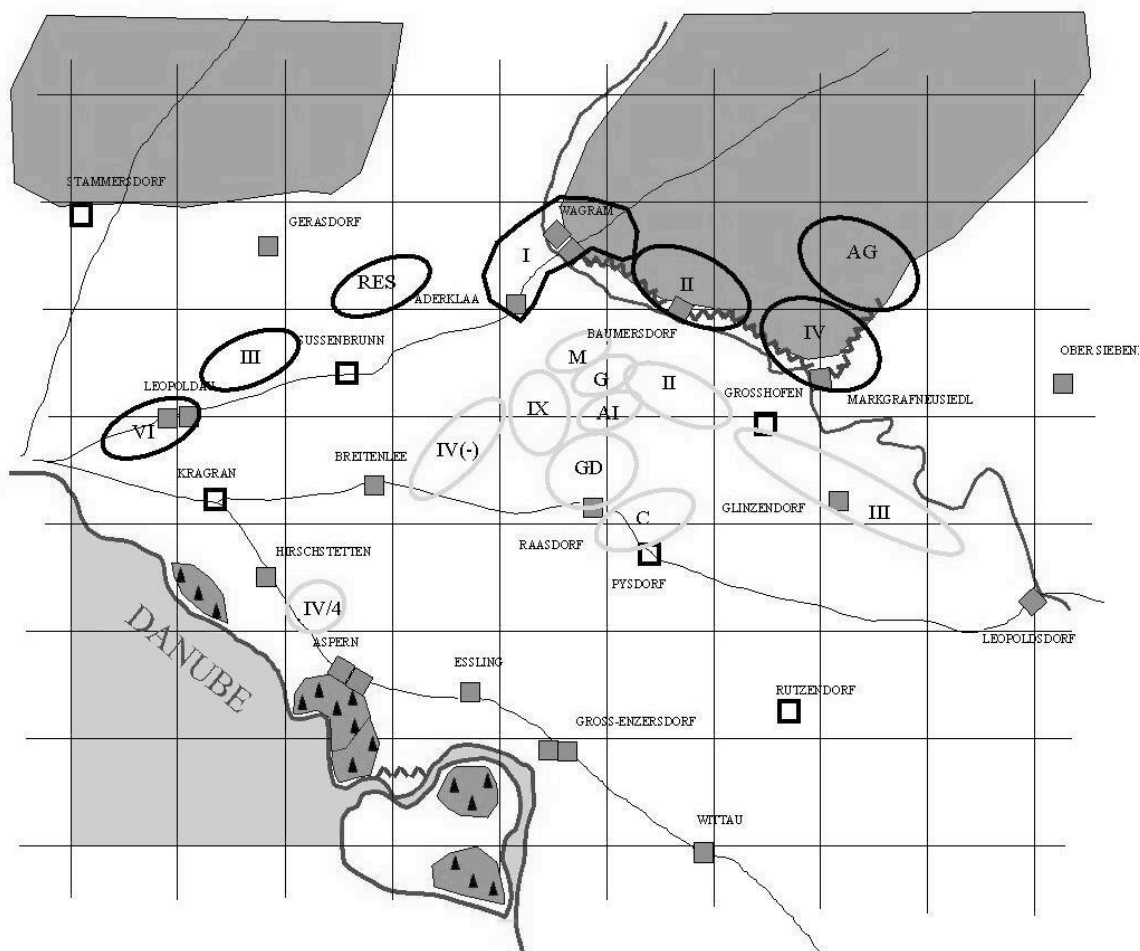

The French army is "Confident." Its Break Point is: 30

Notes on the Scenario:

The Orders of Battle and map locations are based on the dispositions at 0700. Rosenberg's dawn attack has already been repulsed by Davout, and Klenau, Kollowrath, and Lichtenstein are just approaching the French lines. Unit strengths have been depleted based upon the fighting of July 5th and the early morning of July 6th.
